Information for the Traveler

TOURIST CARDS

No passport is required of the American tourist entering Mexico. The Mexican government has so simplified matters for travelers that those planning to visit the country for less than six months have only to procure a tourist card from the nearest Mexican consul. The fee is $0.81. Travelers allied with tours do not need an individual card. The conductor of the tour will obtain a composite Mexican visa for the entire party.

BAGGAGE

Baggage, up to 150 pounds, is checked free on each ticket. Rules governing hand baggage and the method of checking are the same as those in vogue in the United States. However, when crossing the border at either El Paso, Eagle Pass, Laredo, or Brownsville, Texas, or Nogales, Ariz., baggage must be re-checked. If the hour is inconvenient instructions may be given to an attendant who will take care of the details.

CROSSING THE BORDER

On through trains, tourist cards and baggage are inspected by Mexican custom officials while en route through northern Mexico. Each traveler is permitted to take into the country, duty free, any reasonable amount of clothing and jewelry for personal use, 40 packs of cigarettes and 100 cigars, a camera and similar articles.

Tourists returning to the United States are allowed to bring in the personal property they took out and, in addition, merchandise not exceeding in value $100.00 per capita. This amount includes the souvenirs bought in Mexico such as pottery, textiles, etc., intended for personal use or as gifts, 50 cigars or 300 cigarettes.

CLIMATE

The climate of Mexico is delightful at all seasons. The temperature on the high plateau where Mexico City (altitude 7,349 feet) and many other principal cities are located, averages 67° F., summer and winter. The rainy season lasts from June until September but the showers are almost always of short duration and occur late in the afternoon. They serve to freshen the air and make the vegetation more luxurious.

WHAT TO WEAR

It is not necessary to buy extra wearing apparel. Bring to Mexico the same clothing that you wear at home on sunny days in the late fall. For the cool evenings a light overcoat or wrap is desirable. In Taxco, Uruapan, Oaxaca and other places at lower altitudes than those of Mexico City and the vicinity somewhat lighter clothing will be found convenient. For the seaports a summer wardrobe is essential.

EXCHANGE OF MONEY

You can live cheaply in Mexico. The rate of exchange is about 5.00 per dollar. The unit of Mexican money is the silver peso. If you are going directly to some of Mexico's principal cities, on reaching the border you need exchange only enough American money to cover your expenses until you reach your destination. There you may be able to get better rates at the bank. Travelers' cheques can be cashed almost anywhere.

Useful Spanish Phrases

In addition to Spanish which is the language of Mexico, there are many Indian dialects. English is spoken in Mexico City and other places throughout the country. However, you will find that the accompanying Spanish phrases will be helpful.

Mexico City and the Vicinity

HIGH on the ancient and storied Anáhuac plateau lies Mexico City, the oldest capital on the American continent—yet modern and progressive. It is a city of over a million friendly people and your destination. Located in the Valley of Mexico almost a mile and a half above the level of the sea, sheltered by a rim of towering mountains, culminating in two mighty volcanoes that thrust into the brilliant sun their eternal caps of snow, the Mexican Capital enjoys an unrivalled climate. . . . Warm, sunny days. . . . Nights cool and brisk. . . . And this even during the rainy season when showers occur usually only in the late afternoons.

Over six centuries ago the Aztecs, looking for a place to settle, wandered into this Valley and this climate, and conquered older races. Two hundred years later the Spaniards arrived, looking for gold. . . . Today the archaeological monuments recount the tale of the Indian civilization, while the medieval churches and feudal fortresses are reminiscent of Colonial Spain.

You will enter the massive Cathedral in the Zócalo that stands on the site once occupied by the great temple of Tenochtitlán, Moctezuma's capital. You will sit on a bench in the Alameda, once the site of an Aztec market. In 1592 the Spaniards converted the whole area you now see into a park. On the streets will pass Indians whose ancestors used the Aztec Calendar Stone now housed in the National Museum.

In and around Mexico City you will find much to command your interest; to challenge your imagination. . . . The magnificent Paseo de la Reforma, lined with eucalyptus trees and laid out by order of the Empress Carlota; a thoroughfare that begins at Manuel Tolsa's famous equestrian statue of Charles IV of Spain, and ends at the gates of Chapultepec Park. . . . The Park itself with its Castle on Grasshopper Hill, built by one of the Spanish viceroys and used by Maximilian, and Presidents; with its charros on Sunday mornings; with its lovely fountain of Don Quixote, a fountain almost hidden beneath giant, moss-hung ahuehuetes older than Moctezuma. . . . In another quarter of town, the church and monastery of Santo Domingo, once the home of Dominican fathers in charge of the Inquisition. . . . The adjoining plaza where under the arcades professional scribes still pound out on typewriters love-letters for those who can neither read nor write. . . . The San Carlos Gallery with its paintings by Miguel Cabrera, an eighteenth century Zapotec Indian from Oaxaca and one of Mexico's most celebrated artists. . . . The colonnaded patios of Merced monastery, built early in the seventeenth century and one of the finest examples of ecclesiastical architecture to be found in Mexico, ranking with the church and monastery at Tepozotlán, once a Jesuit school for the sons of Indian nobles. . . . The National Pawnshop and its heirlooms from other days. . . . The impressive building of the School of Mines. . . . The Iturbide Palace that recalls Mexico's struggle for independence and the aftermath of an empire that lasted but little more than a year.

The National Palace. . . . The old College of St. Peter and St. Paul, now the Museum of Popular Art with its collection of native crafts and folk arts assembled by Roberto Montenegro. . . . Crafts in the market places. . . . Flower markets. . . . Glimpses through open doorways where the rims of old fountains are dotted with potted plants and blooms. . . .

The Valley of Mexico is rich in the ruins of ancient, forgotten peoples, ruins that hint at a communication between the Old World and the New thousands of years ago; ruins that add to the mystery of Mexico. In an excavation beneath the Pedregal, a vast bed of lava, you will see the skeletal remains of archaic man and ponder over clay figurines with costumes not unlike those worn in Italy during the Middle Ages. At Tenayuca, you will stand before an Aztec pyramid and gasp at beauty achieved by mass and proportion; a pyramid that reflects the strength of the pre-Conquest civilizations. By far the most famous of the archaeological monuments are at San Juan Teotihuacán, twenty-eight miles north-east of the capital. Here lie the remains of a colossal city over-shadowed by the gigantic Pyramid of the Sun and the lesser Pyramid of the Moon—a city that was a grass covered legend before the Aztecs entered the Valley of Mexico.

On the way to the Pyramids visit the shrine at Guadalupe Hidalgo and go through the Augustinian church and monastery, built before 1560, at Acolman. . . . On another afternoon drift along the canals through the Floating Gardens at Xochimilco, the oldest and most picturesque in America; listen to music strummed out on guitars; buy an armful of cinnamon pinks for almost a song. . . . Motor through Tlalpan, smothered in planting; stop at the Franciscan monastery in Churubusco; drive on past the Casa de Alvarado in Coyoacán, the site of a pre-Columbian Indian village and Mexico City's first suburb; have tea at the San Angel Inn, in a patio filled with bougainvillea and roses, and stroll through gardens started by early friars. . . .

Reserve a Friday for Toluca and its market, cluttered with colorful sarapes, embroideries and baskets. . . . Stop at the Desert of the Lions. . . . Visit Los Remedios with its Spanish water tower. . . . Go beyond the Valley of Mexico to Cholula and Puebla. In the past, Cholula pulsed with energy but now it is a quiet, curious mixture of pyramids and churches, of earthen mounds and tile domes. Puebla was founded by the Spaniards shortly after the Conquest. The first Talavera pottery and the first tiles made in America were fashioned there. Majolica decorates the facades of its buildings and the domes of its many churches. Visit the library—the third oldest in America, built in 1648, the original shelving being still in use. . . . Go on to Tehuacán, Mexico's famous spa and finest watering place. . . . Inspect a modern rural school. . . .

Return to the capital and then pay a visit to Amecameca, the closest village to the volcanoes, noted for its shrine to the Lord of Sacromonte. . . . Later, drop down over the mountains to Cuernavaca and a lower altitude, the week-end retreat of diplomats and business men from the capital. Inspect the Cortés Palace and the Borda Gardens with their historic mangoes. . . . Then on to the old mining town of Taxco located high in the mountains of Guerrero and architecturally a resplendent gem, as unreal as a stage setting.

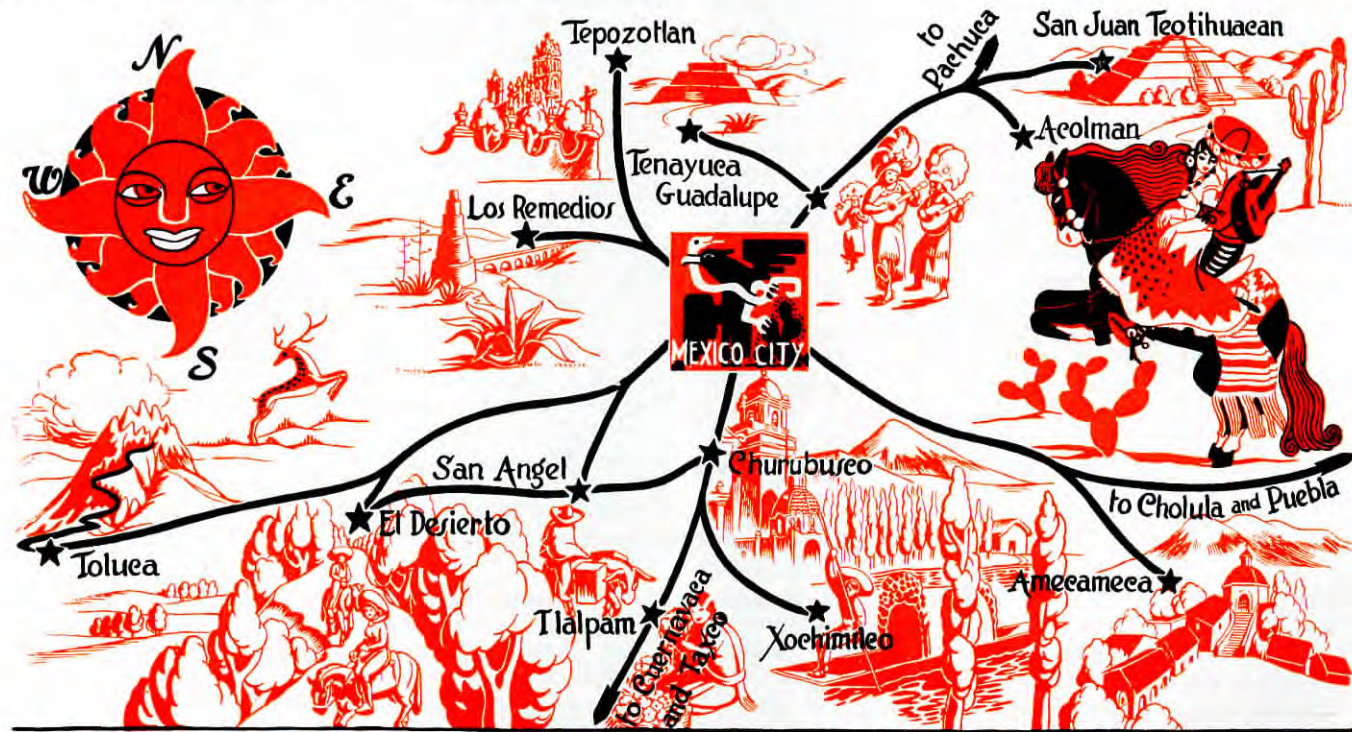

Two hours away from Mexico is Pachuca. Unlike Taxco it is still one of the greatest mining centers of the world. It was here that in 1557 the patio process of mining silver was discovered. From Pachuca drive to El Chico and to the Real del Monte.

Intersperse your sight-seeing in the capital and your excursions to nearby places with recreation and entertainment. . . . Bull fights on Sunday afternoons. . . . Jai-alai, one of the world's fastest games. . . . Street theatres. . . . Itinerant puppet shows, among the most imaginative to be found anywhere. . . . Cabarets. . . . Operas in season. . . . Concerts in the new Palace of Fine Arts. You may be fortunate enough to hear one conducted by Carlos Chavez if he is not busy filling engagements in the United States or in European capitals. His ballet "H.P." was produced by the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. Just as Mexico staged a renaissance in painting with murals by Rivera, Orozco and others, he seems to be on the eve of bringing a new technique to the music of the modern world. . . .

Months are none too long to explore the highways and byways of Mexico City and vicinity. Yet, even a two weeks' trip through Mexico is an unforgettable experience. The interest of the traveler is not confined to the magnificent scenery, ruins and art treasures, but to the people, their manner of life, their handicrafts, arts, and traditions.

Witness at first hand the new life that is growing in Mexico. In every corner of the land mighty constructions are going on—workingmen's villages, nursery schools, hotels, apartments. . . . Whether you come for a vacation or study your stay will be pleasant and profitable.

Shopping in the Mexican Market Place

FEW things in Mexico afford the visitor such keen enjoyment as shopping in her market places. Each is a riot of color and each a hubbub of commotion. On a main market day many a sleepy plaza in the small towns of the Byways is turned into a scene of animation, friendly and good-natured. Indians spread their wares and in any of these villages your eye travels down a row of stalls shaded by white parasols and then along the ground, crowded with an overflow of oranges, tomatoes and pottery. Corn and peppers mingle with gourds . . . with sturdy baskets, a light yellow . . . gay sarapes . . . toys that intrigue the adult as well as the child . . . puppets a few inches high . . . wistful, purple cows fashioned from clay.

The Mexican market is an institution of long standing. Just as the Spanish Conquerors were amazed by the markets of ancient Tenochtitlán you too will be amazed by the markets of modern Mexico City—amazed and delighted. Again and again you will return to the flower market of Plaza de San Juan. You will rummage among the antiques on the puestos, or stalls, in the Plaza de Mixcalco in the hope of finding figurines carved before the arrival of the Conquerors or an occasional piece of Chinese porcelain brought to the Mexican capital in the days when Mexico was a stepping stone on the trade route between the Far East and Spain.

Nearby, on the Calle Carretones, is the old glass factory that has been in the same family for four generations. Here you can buy exquisite miniatures and see the famous Mexican bubble glass handblown and whirled from molten glass into finished pieces, not by artisans but by artists.

Crafts from all parts of Mexico appear in the shops and markets of the capital . . . More glass from Guadalajara . . . Lacquered boxes of olinalá and lacquered gourds from Tehuantepec . . . Hand-tooled leather from the Calle Pino Suárez, just off the Zócalo . . . Fibre baskets with bands of black from Guanajuato . . . Pottery jugs and bowls with flowered decoration and made by Indians who spurn a potter's wheel from the little pueblo of Santo Tomás, in Michoacán.

Gold filigree jewelry, comparable to the best of the Florentine, from Yucatán . . . Jewelry of silver and old jade from the back streets of the capital . . . Candlesticks, lamps and trays of hammered tin that needs no polishing from Taxco . . . Deep cream-colored pottery with strong designs in reddish-brown from the mountain fastnesses of Guerrero . . . Silver bracelets, plates and goblets, hand-hammered and etched in the tradition of ancient Toltec forbears, from the silversmiths of Mexico City.

The largest of the capital's markets, la Merced, pours out of a central building and extends for blocks in all directions, a half square mile or more of soft, Mexican noise—and color . . . Sarapes, heavy and rug-like from Toluca; two-tone and light in weight from Tlaxcala, black-bordered and with a field of powder blue shot through with white diamonds from Texcoco . . . Rebozos, or shawls, of cotton; rebozos of silk with a weave so fine they can be passed through a ring . . . Sombreros of palmleaf fibre; sombreros with gold brocade . . . Sashes in brilliant reds and blues from Milpa Alta . . . Samplers with animal designs done by Otomi Indians in pepenado, embroidery unequalled in workmanship when the stitches are close . . . Gay baskets, the gayest in all Mexico, from Toluca.

Down in Oaxaca City, long famed as a craft center and for its colorful market, you will find bright-hued cotton textiles; clay whistles; clay flower holders; and black pottery water jugs, delightful and imaginative, from San Bartolo Coyotepec . . . In Puebla, onyx, tiles, and the renowned Talavera pottery introduced by Spanish friars . . . In San Pedro Tlaquepaque, just outside of Guadalajara, clay fruits, painted pig banks, and polychrome pottery vases, some with designs of quiet, subtle humor.

Not far away, in Tonalá, the garden variety of pottery, rich brown ramekins and casseroles . . . In Uruapan, lacquered chests and bateas with flowers sketched free hand on black backgrounds and etched and polished by enigmatic Tarascan Indians . . . In the market places of Mexico City and those of the Byways you will buy and for surprisingly little, crafts—folk arts—that reflect the life, the yearnings of the natives who fashioned them.

Lake Pátzcuaro and Uruapan are fascinating places in a lovely country that boasts a delightful climate. Both are in the State of Michoacán, the home of the Tarascan Indians—an old race with many skilled craftsmen.

On the lake, Tarascan fishermen cast their nets from primitive dug-out canoes and sell their catch in the plaza of the town.

Uruapan is a center for lacquer ware. Surrounded by orchards and over-flowing with flowers, it is often called the garden spot of the Republic.

Guanajuato is one of the oldest and formerly the richest mining center on the American continent.

It is fantastically perched on a series of small hills and offers a delightful combination of the quaint and the charming.

The little town is located some 7,000 feet above sea level and has many fine, old churches built long ago, with the riches of silver kings.

Guanajuato's streets are steep and tortuous. In appearance the town combines Spain, Italy and the Near East. It must be visited.
