Washington's Big Current Attraction: The Refurnished White House

FINE FOOD —a B&O Tradition

The excellent cuisine long associated with the Baltimore and Ohio is enhanced by table settings featuring the B&O's famous "Blue China" on which historic trains and scenes are depicted.

WASHINGTON TODAY...

Traditionally, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad has been known as "the Route of the Presidents"

As the first railroad to enter Washington, and the only one still maintaining East to West service through the capital, it is natural that the B&O, through the years, should have been chosen by the nation's Chief Executives and many other historic figures for travel to and from the capital city.

When the first B&O train entered Washington on August 25, 1835, President Andrew Jackson dismissed a meeting of his cabinet, so that he and the cabinet members could be on hand to welcome the train—and afterwards, President Jackson became a frequent passenger . . . President James K. Polk rode the B&O to Washington for his inauguration. So did President James Buchanan . . . President Abraham Lincoln began and ended his tumultous years in the White House, with journeys on the B&O—the first, along a triumphal route to his first inauguration, and the last, in death, as the Lincoln funeral train, moving slowly and sadly, carried him to his final resting place.

And during the eventful years that followed, U. S. Presidents, down through Franklin D. Roosevelt, Harry S. Truman and Dwight D. Eisenhower, continued to use the B&O.

Now, as always, the B&O stands ready to serve President Kennedy, when occasions arise for him to use its lines.

For today, as in the past, discriminating travelers who want to get the most out of a trip to Washington, choose the B&O.

Even in the Space Age—or perhaps because of it— more and more people are finding renewed pleasure in the comfort and relaxed atmosphere on B&O's fine passenger trains . . . They enjoy the delicious meals served enroute, and welcome the opportunity to see—really see—the magnificent scenery along the B&O's historic route to Washington. Modern glass-topped stratadome cars—the only ones in the East—add to the traveler's viewing pleasure.

Perhaps this is why, each year, the B&O carries so many Americans—including thousands of school youngsters—on the never-to-be-forgotten pilgrimage to Washington, "Shrine of American Patriotism".

Today, Washington abounds in new and historic sights, momentous events occuring while you are there. More than ever, it is a world capital alive with the excitement of history in the making.

If Washington is your destination, the Baltimore and Ohio welcomes the opportunity of taking you there, over the same route followed by so many of the great figures in the nation's past.

But whatever your mission in traveling, whatever your destination, the B&O hopes that your journey is a pleasant one, and will do its best to make it so.

Maybe You Read In TIME MAGAZINE

. . . . of how B&O voluntarily slowed the schedules of its feature passenger trains, the Capitol Limited and the National Limited. B&O's reason for doing this? To give passengers a smoother, more pleasant ride—particularly in mountainous areas.

Time Magazine called the B&O's unprecedented action, a move "back to the old values of comfort and contemplation" in travel.

We hope you agree—and remember, your B&O train will still get you where you're going with little noticeable difference in arrival time.

B&O's TWO GREAT MID-WESTERN

At the western ends of the Baltimore and Ohio's lines are Chicago, trade and transportation center of the nation, and St. Louis, whose citizens proudly bill her as "the city of a thousand sights" and "the gateway to the Southwest"

Both cities have attractions worth seeing, and the B&O is proud to be the means of transportation, taking thousands of Americans to Chicago and St. Louis, each year, on business and for pleasure.

Chicago, great financial and industrial metropolis, and rail hub of the continent, is a city on the move! Men of vision, planning in the grandiose manner, are now rebuilding and revitalizing Chicago on a vast scale.

Symbolic of the new urban creation is fantastic "Marina City", tubular city-in-the-round, an architectural marvel, featuring twin tower apartment buildings, rising majestically 60 stories above the Chicago River, overlooking the Loop . . . complete with 20 floors of auto parking space, a 600 boat parking area, a 10 story office building, theatres, shops, restaurants and a three-acre park.

Marina City and many other projects now-a-building, join such familiar land marks as the Wrigley Building, the Merchandise Mart, the Adler Planetarium, the Art Institute, Michigan Boulevard, the Loop and Museum of Science and Industry, to make Chicago more than ever "the convention city", that every American should visit.

St. Louis, on-the-Mississippi, is the water-rail center of Mid-America. It is the nation's eighth largest city, focal point for a metropolitan area embracing 3,187 square miles, with a population of more than two million.

Although it is a center of impressive business activity, St. Louis boasts many cultural attractions. Chief among them are: The Missouri Botanical Garden (Shaw's Garden) with its large collection of plant life; the Old Cathedral on the riverfront, one of the oldest churches west of the Mississippi; two top institutions of higher learning, Washington University and St. Louis University, and the boyhood home of the poet, Eugene Field.

Within the St. Louis city limits are 68 parks, among them Forest Park, second largest recreational area of its kind in the United States. Historical attractions include the old Court House, scene of the famous Dred Scott case, and the Campbell House, a mansion of the 1850's, preserved in detail with authentic furnishings and costumes.

And for the romantically inclined, the "Golden-rod Showboat", last of the paddlewheelers, still gives nightly performances of the melodramas that re-capture the flavor of an era when Mississippi showboat business was in full flower.

Yes, both Chicago and St. Louis, are two good reasons why Americans living in the East should "go West" via B&O. Both cities offer excellent rail connections to the Southwest, Pacific Coast and the Northwest.

BALTIMORE—Home City of the B&O

The B&O was chartered as America's first railroad in 1827, at Baltimore.

From the humble beginnings of that day, the railroad now has grown to the size symbolized by the imposing building shown here, in the heart of downtown Baltimore.

This thirteen story building, located in the center of a vast redevelopment program changing the face of Baltimore, is the hub of the huge B&O rail system, which spreads through thirteen states and the District of Columbia.
